

Birds

Birds are warm-blooded vertebrates in the Class Aves, and are generally characterised by possessing feathers, laying hard-shelled eggs, as well as lacking teeth and possessing hard beaks instead. Cladistically speaking, birds are reptiles, but have traditionally been considered a separate group. They are the only surviving dinosaurs, with their closest living relatives being the crocodylians.